BOY LONESOME IN WEST

Ran Away to Oklahoma, but Father Brings Him Home

Norman Stites, two-year-old, who disappeared from his home at 418 North Nineteenth street, February 15, and was found at the Indian reservation, Osage, Okla., was brought home by his father yesterday.

Stites was inspired by a desire to see the West. So he started from Broad Street Station and finally landed in Oklahoma, said, he says, by passengers.

But away off in Oklahoma the desire to see his "old home town" was strong, and he wrote his father to come and get him. Daddy Stites did.

MRS. SCHUCK SOBS PRAYER
"RAY" MAY ESCAPE CHAIR

"I Don't Know What I Am Going to Do," Says Wife of Convicted Slayer of David S. Paul

"All I can do is pray and wait. But, oh, if they take him away from me what shall I do?"

It was half in prayer that Mrs. Raymond Schuck sobbed out her desolation in the little apartment where she and the man who was convicted Tuesday of murder in the first degree had made their home, 1139 Liberty street, Camden.

She had just returned from visiting Schuck in his cell. In white knitted tunic of short and narrow-colored long coat, she had thrown herself on the sofa in the combined kitchen and dining-room.

"I don't know what I am going to do. What is there for me to do until after Ray is sentenced? I can only pray that somehow the sentence will be commuted—that he will be given life imprisonment. I won't give up hope."

Wipes Tears From Eyes

She sat up and wiped the tears from her face. She straightened the cloth on the table that stood near.

"The judge is a fighter," she mused, although the little apartment was quite neat in appearance. "I haven't the heart to do anything. I can't dust or wash or do anything but wait and pray till the last hope is gone."

"I shouldn't have gone to the prison today. I promised the doctor I wouldn't. But how could I help it? Now I won't be able to see Ray every day as I have been doing."

"There have been all these stories about his affairs with other women," she sobbed again, but her chin lifted as she went on stanchly, "but I would stand by him forever. I don't think the other girl has stood by him much."

Underneath the window in the kitchen stood a baby's white enamel rocking chair. For a second Mrs. Schuck gazed at it. Then she spoke of the child.

"He is the sweetest baby in the world. Let me show you his picture," and she led the way through the center room with its folding bed, to the sitting room at the front of the apartment. She raised the brown window shades that had been down for many days. The light poured in and showed the neat rug and chairs, the silver-piano and the piano lamp with its rose-colored shade. It filtered across the walls hung with family portraits. Near one window was a large and excellent likeness of Raymond Schuck. Below it was the latest picture of six-year-old Raymond, junior. He was in a white sailor suit, his hair smoothly combed, eyes wide and interested as he posed as a regular sailor man.

"No, the baby doesn't know anything about the trial," went on Mrs. Schuck. "He simply worships his daddy, and asks for him every day. He thinks daddy is sick in a hospital. He has never gone to school, and has been staying with his grandmother these last weeks."

She let her glance stray over the corner room. "We had such a nice home. We could have been so happy. Oh, I don't see why he did it. It can never be said that my extravagance drove him to madness, but practically eliminating vibration. Judged from every angle—stability, dependability, economy, beauty—the Dorris has always been a big-value car."

just like the Schuck place, a play- piano was going. Across the street some children gazed in a tiny shop window at a quaint display of paper dolls. But Mrs. Schuck, gazing out the window, saw and heard nothing of the routine things about her. Relatives said she had slept little since the trial began. Her pallid, haggard face shows the strain of waiting.

They haven't shown any mercy whatever to Ray. It seems to have made no difference that he confessed—that he told them where to find the money. Perhaps there can be another trial—maybe the judge will make the sentence imprisonment. Slowly, wearily, she reiterated, "I can only hope."

The Dorris "Built Up to a Standard —Not Down to a Price"

For fifteen years Dorris cars have embodied such fundamental principles as Valve-in-Head Motor, Unit Power Plant and Multiple Disc Clutch, later adopted as standard practice by other leading manufacturers. This pioneer leadership, set by Dorris, has been maintained by the adoption of such typical improvements as the six-cylinder motor with seven-bearing crankshaft and camshaft, instead of the customary three or four bearings, thus practically eliminating vibration. Judged from every angle—stability, dependability, economy, beauty—the Dorris has always been a big-value car.

STEINWAY

STYLE M GRAND PIANO

In Mahogany Case, $1375

Every grand piano is bought for one of two reasons: (1) a desire for more complete musical effect, or (2) for the novelty of form. In either case, Steinway grands offer a great preponderance of inducement. The superlative musical qualities of the Steinway are so generally recognized that well-informed people no longer make comparisons. To the casual observer of exterior effect, the lines of Steinway casing and its exquisite finish are as appealing as the exclusive Steinway tone is to the connoisseur of music. Size is another feature of Steinway distinction. The smallest Steinway grand, Style M, is 5 ft. 7 in. long—ample string length for real grand tone; actual dignity of form in the case. Price—measure the piano by reputation and foot rule.

Steinway pianos may be bought on monthly payments
